Nonprofit Learning Communities

Co-organized by Impact Alamance and United Way of Alamance County, the Nonprofit Learning Communities bring together nonprofit leaders who are working to improve quality of life in Alamance County.

Organized around the five social determinants of health, each learning community creates space for organizations to learn from one another, build meaningful relationships, share resources, and explore opportunities for collaboration.

Participants Have Opportunities To:

- Learn from peers facing similar challenges
- Build relationships and expand professional networks
- Share ideas, resources, and best practices
- Identify emerging community needs and opportunities
- Strengthen collaboration and collective impact across Alamance County

Learning Communities

Neighborhood Conditions & Built Environment

Focus Areas: Affordable & Healthy Housing, Transportation, Access to Healthy Food

For organizations working to improve the physical conditions that shape health and well-being. Participants explore challenges and opportunities related to housing stability, transportation access, and food systems.

Healthcare Access & Quality

Focus Areas: Mental Health Services, Substance Use Treatment

For organizations focused on improving access to care and health outcomes. Participants discuss barriers to services, share promising practices, and explore ways to strengthen trust in healthcare systems.

Social & Community Context

Focus Areas: Interagency & Provider Coordination, Community Connections & Resources

For organizations interested in strengthening relationships, systems, and networks that support community well-being. Participants explore ways to increase connectedness, improve resource sharing, and strengthen civic infrastructure.

Economic Stability

Focus Areas: Economic Mobility, Workforce Development

For organizations supporting financial stability and opportunity for individuals and families. Participants share workforce and economic mobility strategies and identify collaborative approaches to reducing barriers and expanding opportunity.

Education Access & Quality

Focus Areas: Maternal & Child Health, Early Childhood Development, Education

For organizations focused on helping children and families thrive. Participants explore opportunities to align services, support healthy development, and promote long-term educational success.
